It's Election Time (be Very Afraid...)By Ralph A RodriguezAndrew Updegrove's first book, The Alexandria Project, exposed institutional hacking and security flaws that allowed those with skill and understanding of our internal cyber vulnerabilities to easily take the US to the brink of disaster. This time around, he takes advantage of the upcoming Presidential Election to show how easily a cyber-security disaster of a different type could unfold. The Lafayette Campaign unspools a masterful plot of deceit, creativity, sexual manipulation and coverup to ensure that you won't be able to stop reading, all the while wondering if PAC money diverted and spent on cyber hacking could steal an election from the American people. Read The Lafayette Campaign to see why a Stuxnet like attack against American voters isn't so far fetched in 2016...0 of 0 people found the following review helpful. Another Winner!By Clifford L. FeightnerI'm a twice-published author with a career in advanced technology and global program management. I've lived in a number of locations around the globe. I devour techno thrillers, and this first work by Andrew Updegrove has made me a Friend of Frank, and I cannot wait to read his next book. The plots are technically accurate and the main character, Frank, is man that you would love to call friend. An added bonus is the books are extremely timely, mirroring contemporary world events!1 of 1 people found the following review helpful. Frank's Back—Just in TimeBy Doug NortonFrank Adversego returns, at just the right time. Andrew Updegrove's second novel follows the tasty recipe of satire and seriousness he first served us as The Alexandria Project. And now we become acquainted with a deeper Adversego: alongside the nerdiness and courage we've seen before, the author reveals a guy disappointed that the opportunities of youth are no longer there to be grasped, but ultimately realizing there's a lot of enjoyment—perhaps deeper—still to be had. I'm looking forward to seeing his evolution continue in the next novel. There's a delightful inside joke aspect of this book, especially for authors. Updegrove's depiction of turning an idea into a book and of literary agents, publishers, ghost writers, and book marketing will entertain everyone who's set foot on that road. Suppose someone did hack the political polls? Those polls drive so many aspects of our politics and government that the consequences would be immense. And what if the evil genius directing the hack only thinks he's directing it? The Lafayette Campaign is definitely a read for our present wacky but consequential political times. I hope that what I just saw on "Pox News" was really only the trailer for this entertaining and thought-provoking novel.

America is rushing headlong into another election year, but something is wrong – the polls don't match reality. It's up to cybersecurity super sleuth Frank Adversego to find the Black Hats who are trying to hack the presidential election, and stop them before they do. The action begins when a nameless government agency recruits Adversego to find out who's manipulating the polls, but he soon learns that the voting results are at risk as well. From then on, it's a race against time to see who will stop who as the presidential election – and Adversego's life – hang in the balance. In this latest Frank Adversego thriller, you'll meet a scheming Native American casino manager, a scrum of presidential candidates too incredible to be believed anywhere outside of a real American election, a former Secretary of Defense who will stop at nothing, and an attractive French hitchhiker that Adversego rescues in the middle of a desert, and soon wishes he hadn't. The Lafayette Campaign provides a satirical take on American politics and our infatuation with technology that will make readers pause and wonder: could this really happen? Andrew Updegrove brings a rare combination of drama, satire and technical accuracy to his writing. The result is a book you can't put down that tells you things you might wish you didn't know. - Admiral James G. Stavridis, retired Commander, U.S. European Command and NATO Supreme Allied Commander Europe, and current Dean of the Fletcher School of Law and Diplomacy
